THE CONVENTION.

CINCINNATI, May 1.—The Exposition hall has been elaborately prepared and tastefully decorated for the occasion, at considerable expense, due to the efforts of Major A. T. Osborne, of the citizens committee, with Colonel George Ward Nichols and William Storer, Jr., of the committee of arrangements. Under alterations and additions planned by these gentlemen, the hall was so greatly improved that not only were no serious difficulties encountered which had been apprehended relative to defective acoustic capacity, but the speakers could be distinctly heard in every part of the building. The chair in which John Adams sat when he signed

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE is set for the intended president of the convention. By the time of the meeting the body of the hall was filled with delegates, while the galleries were rapidly filling up with spectators, among whom were included a large number of ladies. At 12 o'clock a considerable extent of the future destinies of the country, has assembled. The event is memorable, and the sight deeply interesting. The hum of multitudinous hosts and the strains of music with which the past hall has been filled for the last hour has ceased, and Col. Grosvenor announces, in the sudden hush, that the convention will please come to order.

Col. GROSVENOR'S ADDRESS.
He said, as chairman of the liberal republican committee, appointed by the liberal republican state convention of Missouri, by which this convention was called, it is my pleasure, gentlemen, to call you to order. This convention, originated in a single state, has now embraced representatives, and worthy representatives, of the republican party in every state of the union. [Applause.]

Nothing can prove more effectively the depth and the strength of the public sentiment to which we are appealing, than the fact that the call, originated so informally and originated in a state by no means the largest or the most potent. In political affairs, has led to a convention acknowledged now by all to be not only the largest in point of numbers ever assembled, but the truest representative of the popular sentiment. [Applause.]

OUR APPEAL TO THE COUNTRY
It appears, then, to be based upon a correct judgment of the public feeling and the public need. [Applause.]

It was so defined as to embody that will of the people which after all does rule, and shall rule these United States. Men from that state, who took the risk of calling such a convention, are here today rejoicing in its success, and confident that in the delegation are assembled the wisdom and the will of the people of the United States, which will make its action a success in November next. [Applause.] I will not here make the usual

APPEAL FOR HARMONY.
Men who have surrendered their share in a victorious party because of their convictions of duty, will not come here to struggle for personal preference. [Applause.] These preferences we lay upon the altar of our common country, and all else save those convictions of duty we can surrender, but those we do not propose to throw away in order to win the battle. [Applause.]

In the firm belief, gentlemen, that this convention, called originally for consultation, will act so wisely that the people of the United States will give it triumph; in the firm belief that it will meet that demand which is felt over the country for something more than consultation, for a nominee who shall

REPRESENT THE PEOPLE.
[Applause.] I ask you to go forward with and organize that struggle against the power which has so long and injuriously controlled party organizations and political power. [Applause.] Gentlemen, by direction of the executive committee I have the honor to name as your

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN,
Judge Stanley Matthews of Ohio. [Applause.]

The motion was carried unanimously. In the address of Hon. Stanley Matthews, he said: "It is no affection on my part when I say to you that it is impossible to express the deep sensibility with which I have received this unexpected and distinguished mark of your consideration. The honor of temporarily discharging the duties of the chair in the preliminary organization of the body, which I believe and trust is to be memorable in the history of party and politics in this country, is altogether undeserved. Of course, gentlemen, it would not be becoming in me now to pretend to assume at the outset the role of the prophet, for I am neither a prophet or a son of a prophet, and no man yet can tell what may be the issue of your deliberations, and yet the time has come when it is the voice of an exceedingly large and influential portion of the American people that they are determined they will not long be dogs.

TO WEAR THE COLLAR
of a party. [Applause.] We have assembled ourselves together, gentlemen, as members of a party which has heretofore been designated as the republican party. I am not ashamed, gentlemen, to have borne that name with thousands of others, whose previous party affiliations might have led them otherwise, and who united at the time of danger to preserve the integrity of the union.

The great achievements of that struggle have been embedded not only in the hearts and habits of the whole people, but has become perpetually a part of our fundamental law, establishing forever the stability of the union and the integrity of nation and the principle of pride of ancestry, that those who boasted most of their progenitors were like the plant which he had discovered in America. The best part of it was under ground. [Laughter.] It is not because the Republican party has done good things that it deserves to live, but only as it shows a presentability to CONTINUE THE WORK OF REFORM.

It is because those who have succeeded in obtaining control of its organization and machinery for diverting it from its legitimate objects and purposes, that we are here today to call back those who are willing to work with us to restore these principles to their original purity. And now, gentlemen, one of the deep and earnest convictions which has spread universally almost through the hearts of the American people, out of which this movement originates, is this: That the war of the rebellion is ended and that

PEACE HAS COME,
[applause] and as the war has ended, so ought military rule and military principles, [cries of good cheer, and good cheers] so ought everything that is arbitrary; so ought everything that degrades a race or an individual; so ought everything that oppresses, everything that corrupts, everything that keeps alive and fans the embers of the dying, as it ought to be.

THE DEAD PAUSE.
The cry came up four years ago and it was thought to be an auspicious omen, when it was said:

"LET US HAVE PEACE."
But we have not had peace. Look at the South today. We have the example of so-called civil governments bankrupting the communities they effect to represent; power usurped by strangers and not conferred by the voice of the people—not for the purpose of restoring the property of these blighted fields, but for

CORRUPTLY ENRICHING MEN who deem that power and office belong to them as a property and not as a trust. So it is, gentlemen, in every department of the government. The slow poison of corruption, not only sufficiently slow, seems to have pervaded the whole civil and political administration of the country from the head to the foot. [Applause.] It is because Republicans with party, with reluctance, with sorrow and regret, see, know and experience this condition of public affairs that they have felt that they could no longer afford the responsibility of

PARTNERSHIP IN SUCH A WRONG.
[Applause.] But it was their duty to lead and lead the column out in order to restore all the blessings of a good government, sound government, just government and honest government. [Applause.] But, gentlemen, I am detaining you much longer than I intended; you have a great work before you—a work of unexampled difficulty. Let us not conceal it from ourselves. You are called together contrary to precedent as a mass convention; your first duty is therefore to inaugurate and organize your body so that it may speak with the authority of a just and equal representation of all opinions and of all interests. That is the work to which you are now summoned. It is my privilege, it is my honor, to inaugurate your deliberations in this preliminary organization. I have had no such experience in public life or in deliberative assemblies as will justify me in so successfully conducting you through these preliminary stages. The duty, the responsibility, is upon you. I have great faith, gentlemen, in you on the outcome of this assembly. I have an abiding, unshaken faith in the immortality and triumph of those principles which I know will be the guide of your organization. [Applause.]

I am deeply indebted to you, gentlemen, for the honor you have conferred on me and for the kindness and courtesy which you have extended to me. I will detain you no longer. You will now proceed to complete the temporary organization of your body.

ORGANIZATION.
Amid cheers and shouts, Mr. Grosvenor said: By request of the executive committee I propose as temporary secretaries of the convention, George Ward Nichols, of Ohio, G. W. Palmer, of Illinois, Joseph Pulitzer, of Missouri. By further institution of the executive committee, I have the following resolution to propose:

RESOLUTION.
Resolved, That when the convention adjourns it adjourn to meet again to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and that in the meantime the several State delegations elect from among their members delegates to double the number of the votes to be cast by their respective States in the election of officers, and that when this convention meets again at 10 o'clock to-morrow forenoon, the delegates so elected report themselves for the purpose of proceeding to the transaction of the business of the convention. Before an adjournment is made, I am requested by the local committee to announce that the tickets for delegates to-morrow will be issued at No. 9 Mozart hall, at 9 o'clock, upon presentation of credentials from the several States.

The Chair. This completes all that is possible at this meeting in the work of preliminary organization.

A delegate then moved to adjourn. As the president was about to put the question he was interrupted, and his voice drowned by sudden and vociferous from all parts of the hall, which were continued until that gentleman appeared in front of the platform, when some one started forward and asked for three rousing cheers for Schurz, which were given with tremendous enthusiasm, many of the delegates leaping from their seats, and waving their hats in concert with the outpouring roar of voices that chorused a welcome to the speaker. Such was the anxiety to hear him, that he was forced to decline in a few remarks of an almost peremptory character. Mr. Schurz said:

MY FELLOW CITIZENS: It is impossible for me to express my gratitude for the cordial manner in which you have called me out and received me, but I fear I shall have to disappoint you now. This convention means business [applause], and you have just passed a resolution with regard to the manner in which the business of this convention is to be prepared and to be conducted. The last of May is

MOVING DAY,
[laughter and cheers] and we should lose no time in taking such steps as will be calculated to remove that which is obnoxious to the honest sense of the American people and to put something better in its place. [Applause.] I said that I feared that I should have to disappoint you now, for honestly I do not intend to make a speech at this moment. [Loud cries of "Go on."] In the proceedings of the convention, there will now and then be moments when there is no practical business to be transacted. I shall then perhaps avail myself of some opportunity to address a few remarks to you, and I may observe that I have something to say. [Loud cries of "Now, Now," and cheers.] I have had so frequently to withstand the voices of those who were against me that you must take no exception if I today resist the voices of those who seem in my favor. There is some practical business to be done and there is very little for doing it, and you must bear with me if in obedience to my own judgment, I conclude by simply seconding the motion that we now adjourn. [Loud cheers.]

Amid cries for Cassius M. Clay, and other noted speakers, the chairman then announced that the convention stood adjourned till 10 o'clock Thursday morning.
